

Pre-teaching

Pre-teaching is a strategy that involves teaching learners about concepts or skills before they encounter them in the classroom. This technique aims to provide the language and skill building blocks to ensure every learner is prepared for new concepts before the next topic takes place. Pre-teaching differs from other types of self-led learning, as the subject matter will always be explored in the subsequent lesson. This reserves the classroom for the application or deepening of knowledge rather than the introduction of it.

The primary objective of pre-teaching is to establish the foundations for a single lesson or unit of work. This helps to identify the gaps in knowledge for your learners before its application, and bridging this gap ensures the upcoming lessons will be successful for both them and the teachers involved.